Hopefully the arrival of this issue will be a pleasant surprise to readers, and an indicator that future issues of Enigma should arrive on time. Although Enigma doesn't follow a fixed publication schedule, issues are published broadly around January, May, August and December.

As I write this, the 1999 crop circle season seems to have got off to a prodigious start with some very elaborate formations starting to appear. As published in previous issues, I firmly believe that 1999 will be a landmark year for human consciousness.

However, we need to keep one foot firmly on the ground to avoid being swept away on the current tide of disinformation and global turmoil. This year has seen an unprecedented amount of government encumbrance on the world around us. What with the events in Kosova (so obviously staged for financial reasons) to their involvement in the GM food debate.

I hope to investigate GM foods in future issues, not because it is specifically paranormal, but it's effects are certainly unexplained and the government seems intent on muddying the issue. After all the saga over banning beef because of the danger of CJD etc, the day after the media publish information questioning whether CJD is anything to do with beef, the government issue a statement indicating their planned media campaign to assure people that there is nothing to worry about with genetically modified foods. Yeah right. Next, they'll be saying that they're actually beneficial for your health and that smoking doesn't cause cancer. The fact is that Monsanto (one of the leading multi-national companies involved in GM research) hasn't done anywhere near enough testing of it's methods for anyone to say if it's safe or not.

Put simply, you, I AND the government don't have enough research information to be able to make an informed decision. Until we do, I for one will be taking every step possible to avoid any food at all which contains any trace of GM material.

Indeed, it seems that the government is bombarding us with all sorts of new legislation, proposed schemes and changes to the existing status quo, that it's proving quite difficult to work out what their hidden, ultimate agenda is.

Keep your eyes open and always read between the lines of any media story in order to investigate the real truth.

Eating Our Words

by Diaghann Krishna

"The whole crop circle phenomenon is such an adventure. It changes you in some way that you can't go back to your regular job and be happy talking about making curtains and painting your house..."

quote by D.Krishna from the documentary Croppies.

The appearance of the above quote in the Cereologist Issue #23 couldn't have been timed more perfectly and highlights the magnificent sense of humour that we've often attributed to the Circlemakers. From my personal experience I have found it goes well beyond the corn fields! Shortly after this came out, Kerry Blower rang me up and read over the phone the quote that had been immortalised in Croppies. We burst out into hysterical laughter, because ironically enough, on the previous day we had gone to Homebase to buy paint and curtain rods for the cottage I had just moved into! Then over lunch that afternoon at the Red Lion in Avebury, Kerry and I had our usual philosophical discussion about the process of inner transformation happening to many of us now, tossed around some ideas for a conference, and then discussed the best place to buy a Hoover. When we listened to ourselves, we couldn't stop laughing at how different our conversations have become over the years. Time and experience has brought a merging of the two worlds of the "mundane" daily life with the magic and mystery surrounding the crop circle phenomenon. It doesn't seem to be a battle between the two states of being anymore, but rather a merging of the two worlds to create something entirely different. It means that I carry the same expectations of "little miracles" and coincidences to happen around every corner, including pumping fuel at Esso, which I had never experienced (or perhaps noticed) before the crop circles became a part of my life.

No stone tablets have ever fallen from the sky to explain how it all works and I've never had definite evidence for understanding the origin of the anomalies I've personally experienced during the past few years. These experiences have ranged from looming balls of light to physical (kundalini) effects that almost blew a fuse in the house when I talked excitedly about my first experience in a crop circle to thinking a formation would never appear in a particular field in Cambridge because it was "too ugly" ... and one appeared the following day! I knew these and other experiences are real because of the effect they had on me.

I began to question everything I'd ever been taught by others and attempted to recreate the unusual experiences, so that the strange feelings of aliveness they provoked inside could be integrated as a part of my everyday life. And, it's worked as long as I've focussed on that "magical" state of being that has brought so much fun with it. I know it worked because my life has gradually changed in all aspects as a result. The bottom line is that it doesn't matter what I do, but how I'm doing it... and I can stay in the state of magic throughout every minute of the day if I choose to.

I chuckle whenever an email comes in from someone who's "solved the mystery of crop circles", because I've been there too, trying to create my own belief system to help me wrap my mind around the greatest enigma I've ever encountered in my life. Perhaps I'm chuckling because the irony is that I truly know less than I did years ago, though have gone through several lifetimes worth of rich experiences. The more answers I seem to come up with, the deeper the questions go the following year. It's as if we graduate from one level of understanding only to experience being back at square one on a whole new gameboard in a few months time. There is a definite evolution of thought, but it only seems to be possible to ride it sanely by letting go of old ideas in order to expand perceptions. This means in a practical sense being willing to talk to people with a wide range of theories and often wild ideas, because it allows me to see the phenomenon from a different perspective than the one I've personally held. That's what we are doing collectively as "croppies", looking at this phenomenon from a multitude of angles and tossing them around together as we cross paths in formations, on the internet or over pints in The Barge. Then we go back to our own corners with those titbits of information to see how they could fit into our own reality paradigm. Often it's a really uncomfortable fit, but that's what growth is all about. The main point is that I wasn't able to initially understand that fuzzy nature of things that I now see around the edges of this phenomenon, so it has taken years of peeling away layers of how I'd believed the world works, in order to see this window on reality the crop circles have offered. So, I guess I'm saying that this shedding of old concepts and beliefs seems to be a natural part of the evolution process. Never mind that I personally feel the implications are greater than I'd ever imagined, as that's another article.

When I look back over the years of living side-by-side with the crop circles and ask myself what is the greatest gift I've received, it would have to be the lesson to question everything, which also includes my own beliefs. This ambiguity stems from the number one question that seems to be raised whenever the topic of crop circles comes up in conversation - "are they real or hoaxed?" Yet on a personal level we are learning through our experiences that things in life aren't as black and white as we'd been told. In fact we've been fortunate to have this phenomenon show us this fact in such an exaggerated way, while the rest of the world believes in the "absolute truth" of the media and the educational system, which is really only showing one slice of the picture. Clearly, whatever seems to be the consensus reality for today is often just a stepping stone in the everflowing river of life. How many individuals reading this article have shared personal theories with others over the years, only to turn around and change or modify them later? Well, that's what we have to do when we gather more information that sheds a new light on our own perspective of the world today. As a result, I've had to learn to live with a certain level of uncertainty, knowing that the way I view the world today could be entirely different next week as more of the picture unfolds. And, it's been that way many times... I only need to read the above quote as proof. Whatever the case, I now have the quote appropriately framed to provide a constant reminder that the words I utter today just might have to be eaten at some point in the future... so I'd better make sure they are easily digestible.

Crop circle formations in the Czech Republic and north-east Bohemia

(development of crop circle phenomenon, characterizations of formations, concomitant phenomena, measuring)

Part 1. The Early Years

Jan Cerny, Jr. and Andrea Praisler

In this article we would like to tell you something about the development of the crop circle phenomenon in the Czech Republic, and especially in the north-west Bohemia. I'll describe phenomena which are connected with the appearance of crop circles and signs that are typical for true formations.

The first, not very precise information, about formations in Bohemia are from 1985. This formation was probably found not far from Horni Plana and Hostinne. The first example was a circle with diameter 6m and was without vegetation. The second example was 40 circles with diameters of 2m in green grass.

A circle, which was surrounded by whorls, was probably founded in 1989. There were 4 formations in 1990 and 4 formations in 1992.

From year 1993 to 1996: There were only simple formations. Quick change came in year 1996 when really complicated formations started to appear.

The largest czech formation was found near the village Nemilkov (in the area of Klatovy) on 28th July. The diameter was almost 100m and the area of this formation was about 2330sq metres. In all formations there are repetition of the basic pattern. This pattern forms a part of grass, wheat or other plants which are pressed down.

There are more and more new formations and new localities every year. Formations are very often found in the places, which are conformable to last years.

People believe that the first formation was probably founded on 15th August near Nepomerce (district of Kutna Hora) and it was a simple circle in oats.

These were registered by KPU Plzen (Klub Psychotroniky and UFO in Plzen) to the date 23th November : 14 formation in the 1993. In 1994 there were 23 localities and in 1995 there were 35 localities. 40 formations were found in 1996. About 20 formations were registered in 1997. Summer of year 1997 was connected with disastrous floods. In year 1998 there were by that time 26 formations.

Now I would like to tell something about history of this phenomenon in north-east Bohemia. The first formation was probably a circle in alfalfa (lucerne). It was found not far off Vysoke Myto and was probably made on 24th August 1994. Its diameter was 10.3m (north-south) and 9.6m (east-west) and its centre was directed South.

The next was found not far from Vestec, by Jaromer, on 3th September 1994. We were able to research this formation in detail (fig.2). It consisted of: one large circle in the centre - its diameter was 7m, a whorl and 4 lesser circles - their diameters were 3.2 m. Circles were arranged like number five on the die. The formation was in alfalfa (lucerne). There were some interesting things before appearing of this formation. Maybe, these things are connected with appearing, maybe not. These were eg. on 11th September at 22:10 an object was watching over the field, where the formation was found. The object let down an orange light beam. This beam faded away (from left upper corner towards the field) and at the end it quite disappeared.

Later two lights (looked like searchlights) were being watched. Their colours were red and green and these lights were going up(towards) to sky.

The next was a flight of an unknown object over the village of Vestec. On the bottom side of the object there were three green lights which made a shape like triangle. The flight were accompany a buzz noise. On 4th September 1994 was watching an object, its shape was like ball and its size was like the Moon. It was shining bright blue colour. The next day almost at the same place there was found a formation in alfalfa (lucerne).

On 6th August 1995 a circle was found not far from Castolovice. Its diameter was 10m. It was found about 12 days after its appearance.

Year 1996 was very important. New formations, which were larger, more complicated and more beautiful, were being found during this year. Our region wasn't forgotten too. During the night of 3th/4th July a very complicated formation appeared between town Solnice and Jestetice. We researched it on 5th July.

The formation (fig.3) consisted of 8 circles, 3 of them were joined lanes (The largest of them had the diameter 5.3m ;from this crop led the lane which looked like letter E). The largest circle of formation had diameter 19.2m, the crop was swerved anti-clockwise. The centres of spirals weren't in the geometrical centres, crop was interlace, stalks were bended and press down. These signs are typical for genuine formations.

The ends of circles were fray, forms were a bit elliptical.

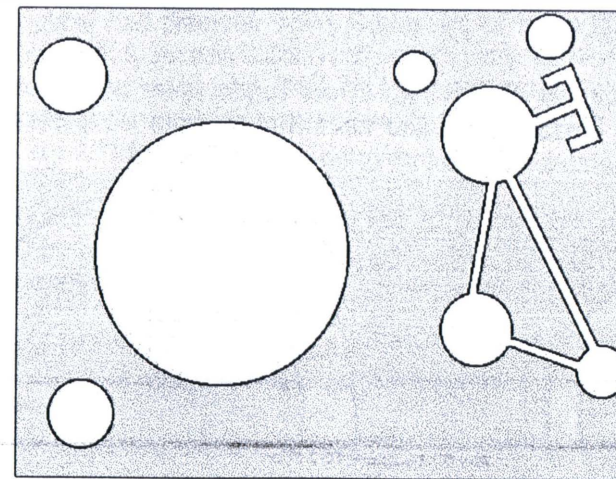

Fig.3 Solnice 1996 "Big Formation"

The next day another group found a second formation. It was a larger circle, its diameter was 3.6m and there were four various long lanes with circles (diameters: 2.3; 2.1; 2.5; 3m) at their ends around the largest circle too.

The date of the appearance of this "Big Formation" (in night between 3th and 4th July 1996) is the same date of the appearing of pictograms in England and in Slovakia. In England the formation was found in Kingsclere not far from Newbury, Hampshire. This formation consisted of 5 circles and whorl. It looked like a Celtic cross and was in wheat. In the same night were made two circles connected lane in Pusta Ves not far off Trnava, Slovakia. In night between 5th and 6th July 1996 was made the second less largest pictogram not far off Solnice, CZ It was called "Flower" (fig.4). In Bratislava, Slovakia were made two circles. The larger was surrounded by whorl.

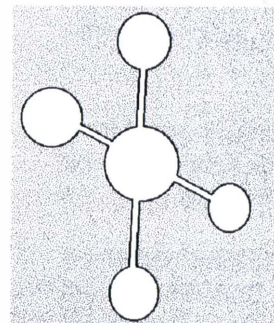

Fig.4 "Flower" formation, Solnice 1996

When "Big formation" not far off Solnice was being made, a reliable witness was watching a shine, which looked like sunrise above the field. It was around 2 o'clock a. m.

The third formation of this year (1996) in our region were two whorls with various diameters in wheat. They were found not far from Nove Mesto nad Metuji (fig.5). The orientation of this formation was north-south.

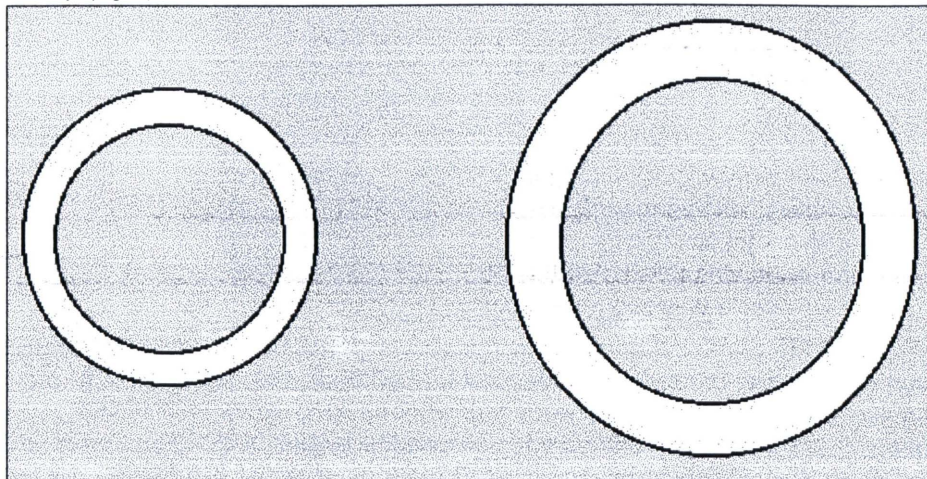

Fig.5 Nove Mesto nad Metuji

Nevertheless, we were able to see the form of swirl. Some stalks were bent and pressed down but they grew horizontal further on, but a lot of stalks were broken too. The diameter of larger whorl was 2.7m and smaller was 1.5m. The smaller whorl was oriented to north. We couldn't find out the date of rise.

The other formation of this year was simple circle in crop. It was founded nor far off Borova u Policky on 1st August. The most interesting sign of this formation was, that the formation was found in boundary-line of two products - barley and oat. The diameter of this circle was 8m, the swirl was anti-clockwise and the circle was situated in the centre of the field.

At the same moment in which circle was probably being made (in night from 31st July to 1st August 1996), another formation was made in Ashbury not far off Swindon, Oxfordshire, England. Its diameter was 175 ft, in wheat.

The fourth formation of year 1996 was found not far from Slatina nad Upou on 17th August. It was called "Dart", because it looked like Dart. There were four circles which were connected with lanes. The largest circle had diameter

3.67m, was swirled clockwise. This swirl was in other circles too.

The smallest circle had diameter 1.5m. Diameters of lanes (There were four lanes) were between 0.3m and 0.6m. Their length were various too. The most interesting in this formation was, that circles were created of skeins which were in several layers. It is a rarity which we could see in our republic for the first time, but not for the last time.

The last crop circles of year 1996 were two simple circles. Their diameters were 6m. They were found not far off Castolovice. The crop circles of 1995 were found there too.

A similar phenomenon was appearing in a very difficult formation in grass not far off Radeč by Upice in year 1996. This formation was made by laying grass but grass wasn't broken. There were no paths leading to formation. The season of year 1996 was finished in this area. The last formation was a circle with a whorl. This circle was connected with a triangle by lane. It was found on 31st August 1996.

Reflexology

An Introduction
by Cathy Smiles

What is Reflexology?

Reflexology is a therapy, grounded in medical science, which uses the stimulation of specific "reflex" areas on the hands and feet, that directly affect the related areas and systems within the body, in order to bring about balance and harmony.

TRANSVERSE AND LONGITUDINAL ZONES

However, this is a therapy that encompasses not only the body, but the mind and spirit also.

How does Reflexology work?

On a scientific level, the body is an electro-magnetic field, with invisible electrical currents. They cover all the organs, glands, body systems and skeletal/muscular systems. They run through 10 zones on the body in line with the fingers and toes - 5 on each side of the body.

For various reasons, our bodies become "poisoned" through the substances we are exposed to in our food, drink and the air we breathe. We are becoming more and more aware of the affects that pollution, pesticides and other poisons are having on our bodies. The result of this poisoning is that the electrical contacts in this electro-magnetic field are unable to be grounded and this causes crystalline deposits to be formed at the nerve endings. This interferes with the flow of energy around the body. Then of course, when you look at our lifestyles today, and add things such as stress and "fast living", it is no wonder the body starts to react in a negative way.

Therefore, the body's natural balance is lost and this can cause a whole range of symptoms, from feeling a bit "under the weather" or lethargic, to diseases such as Multiple Sclerosis and M.E.

From a holistic point of view, which really doesn't differ greatly from the scientific theory, the body is made up of subtle bodies as well as the physical body and these all have energy running through them. If these energies become out of balance, for whatever reason, which can be physical, emotional or psychological, this will create energy blocks which, unless cleared, will manifest ill-health or disease. Even if the blockage starts in one of the subtle bodies and therefore cannot be seen/felt, it will usually manifest in the physical body eventually.

When a Reflexologist works on your feet, they will be able to feel any areas that are causing you problems, or are likely to, as they will be able to feel the crystalline deposits in the reflex areas. They may sometimes be tender to touch as well. Even if there is no physical illness/injury present, there may be an energy blockage in one of the other subtle bodies, and by working this area, it may prevent the problem even manifesting in the physical body. This is why regular treatments are beneficial - you can be pro-active rather than re-active.

What benefits can I expect?

Reflexology works by stimulating all of the body's systems. These are:

- The Endocrine System (the glands that regulate hormone production in the body)
- The Respiratory System
- The Digestive System
- The Nervous System
- The Reproductive System
- The Circulatory System
- The Skeletal System
- The Muscular System
- The Lymphatic System

By stimulating the reflex areas on the feet that correspond to parts of these body systems, the crystalline deposits are broken down and the flow of energy restored to normal. Once the flow of energy has been restored in all parts of the body, it should become balanced and healthy. However, this is not something that can be achieved in one treatment. A series of treatments needs to be taken in order to have an affect on an imbalance and then regularly after that to keep the body in balance.

It should be noted though that Reflexology is not a "miracle cure" for anything (and the same goes for all other therapies). It may be that Reflexology is not the best treatment for your particular condition, in which case your therapist will advise you of this (i.e. a muscular problem is obviously best treated with massage). It is also important to remember that if it is not appropriate (that is, it is not the best thing for your higher self) then no amount of healing will have an effect, until it is appropriate. This is where it can be argued that alternative therapies are better than orthodox medicine, as they will only have an affect if it is for your highest good, and pills from the doctor can interfere with the wishes of your being.

How else does Reflexology work?

There are also many psychological factors in this form of treatment that are of benefit. First and foremost, to actually spend an hour with a therapist whose sole intention is to provide a space for you to relax and promote your well-being makes you feel good about yourself. The fact that you are actually "allowing" yourself this space and have booked this time for yourself, demonstrates that you care about yourself. When we start caring about ourselves, we begin to experience "self-love" and "self-worth". This has a profound affect on our minds and bodies as we are making a statement to the Universe that we care about our bodies and want them to be healthy and balanced. The Universe can then only create this reality, as it only wants for you, what is the highest good for your being.

When you have a therapy of this kind you are also taking responsibility for yourself. So many times you hear people passing the responsibility of not only their health, but their happiness, well-being, careers etc on to other people, such as doctors, parents and employers. Of course this is usually when things are going wrong and it is much easier to blame an outside source.

Essentially, we all have the power of Choice and by taking responsibility for ourselves and choosing what we want, we take the first step to personal empowerment!

Lastly, the benefits of touch, as we all know, are extremely powerful, but sadly in our culture today, is not always "socially correct" and we are all a little inhibited. However, this is a basic human instinct. Babies want to be held and cuddled in order to feel safe, secure, loved and looked after. This need never leaves us, but social conditioning tells us it is not appropriate. Thankfully, these barriers are now starting to come down and other therapies such as massage are losing the stigma that has been attached to them in the past.

What does a treatment consist of?

When you have a Reflexology treatment it should last about an hour and on your first treatment you should have a thorough consultation which can take between 15 and 30 minutes. It is important that the consultation takes place, as there are contra-indications to Reflexology. For example, thrombosis, heart conditions, early pregnancy, high/low blood pressure and varicose veins are all contra-indicated. This is because Reflexology stimulates all of the body's systems i.e. circulatory, nervous, endocrine etc, and treatment could have an adverse affect on these conditions (e.g. a thrombosis could be moved or blood pressure raised even higher). However, this does not necessarily mean that there is nothing that can be done.

Your therapist may give you a shorter, lighter treatment, or avoid certain reflex areas.

It is also important to remember that all complementary therapies, are exactly that and should complement orthodox medicine. If you are seeing your doctor for a certain condition you should always inform them that you are thinking of seeing a Reflexologist and ask their opinion. There are more and more doctors who are now seeing the benefits of complementary therapies and are even prescribing them on the NHS. If you find that your doctor is completely against complementary therapies and you feel that this is unjustified, get a second opinion from another doctor. Remember, you always have Free Choice, but do listen to the advice you are given and make a balanced decision. Your therapist will also be aware of possible problems associated with any medical conditions and if they feel that a treatment is not appropriate, they will discuss this with you.

How do I find a good Therapist?

A lot of therapists advertise, but the best way is always on someone else's recommendation. If you are unsure, it is always best to contact the therapist and have a chat with them and if possible, meet them. You will know whether or not you feel comfortable with them and ask them to tell you about Reflexology, where they trained, and why they became a therapist. You will then be able to tell if you are on the same wavelength. As long as someone has trained with a reputable school/college then there will be no good or bad therapists, just different ones. It is just a case of finding the one that is right for you.

How much should I pay?

On average a treatment will cost between £15 and £25 depending on the area (obviously more in London). However, there are therapists who charge more and less than this. Again, this doesn't make them any better or worse. You need to decide what is an appropriate amount for you to pay - by this I don't mean find the cheapest, but again find a therapist you feel comfortable with and then decide whether their charges are appropriate for you. It may be that the cheapest is wholly appropriate, but remember that a living has to be made.

If you are only able to afford a very little, then you may find a therapist who is willing to give discounted rates or may even be able to do a deal with you, where you do something for them, i.e. gardening, ironing, in return for treatments. This can be a very rewarding way of working and both parties get mutual benefit and there has been an exchange of energies involved.

KOSOVO:

LAST STOP BEFORE JERUSALEM

by Barry Chamish

Barely a few days before the EU and the US, collectively called NATO, sent their flying dogs of war against Serbia, Israeli prime minister Binyamin Netanyahu was in Berlin meeting with the leaders of the European Union. You would think with the attack on the Balkans pending they'd be too busy to have time for a little tete-a-tete with Bibi...But, no; they organized their most fateful meeting with an Israeli leader since the beginning of their continental unity. They told him he'd better not stand in the way of a PLO state with East Jerusalem as its capital or watch out. The watch out part was Kosovo.

Netanyahu got the message and like the Yugoslav president Milosevic before him, flew to Russia for some counterweight. And lo and behold, the Kremlin greeted him like visiting royalty. When the meetings were over, Bibi and Boris agreed to make a united stand against "Islamic fanaticism." What they meant to say, but could not, was that both Israel and Russia were sick of the New World Order plots against their nations and they were forming a, probably futile, little alliance against the Trilateral Commission, Council On Foreign Relations (CFR), Bilderberg group and all those who were now heating up the Balkans, and Chechnya, and Turkey and everywhere else where ethnic tensions could be turned into massacres.

Undoubtedly, both leaders are well aware of how it's done. Take a bus load of Christian Lebanese children, blow it up, blame it on the PLO and before long you've got perfectly civilized Christians killing Moslems out of raw bloodlust. Or take a Serb village, or more if necessary, have some Bosnian Muslims kill every living being within and before long, you'll get just the right kind of savagery from the Serbs.

Then you make the Lebanese Christians the bad guys with a stage-managed media campaign portraying them as bloodthirsty fascists determined to wipe out the hapless, innocent Palestinians who tried to carve out their own fiefdom out of Lebanon. Apply the same formula to Kurds, Tutsis, Israelis, Afrikaners and Serbs. The important thing is to back Marxist Moslems over democratic Christians and Jews. And once the world has been indoctrinated enough to think there is an issue of right and wrong to be dealt with, send in the planes followed by the ground troops of the New World Order armed services.

And once the white Christians and Jews are out of power in Africa, it becomes so much easier to take control of the wealth and resources of a whole continent. All you have to do is install more Marxist dictators, stir up wars, spread epidemics of incurable diseases and now you're talking real easy pickings.

Around 1992, the CFR decided to begin a campaign of worldwide "peace processes" all formulated to result in ghastly wars. After manipulating the fall of the Soviet Union a few years before, innumerable opportunities awaited them behind the former Iron Curtain. After such NWO personalities as Henry Kissinger and Lord Carrington eliminated the last bastions of wealth and security in Africa, it was a piece of cake for them to initiate bloodbaths in Somalia and Rwanda. Soon the NWO planners will turn their attentions to other "peace processes" they started in Northern Ireland and Israel, but first they must dispose of Yugoslavia.

It all began around 1990 when the CFR sent Kissinger Associates partner Lawrence Eagleburger to Belgrade to corrupt and worm his way into the Yugoslav leadership. He bought a controlling interest in the country's largest bank for his bosses, he even introduced the Yugo car to America, bankrolling a large chain of dealerships.

Once the ruling classes were corrupted, the standard methods were employed to stir ethnic rivalries and force the Serbian hand. As usual, peoples who had drifted to historical Serb lands to seek improved economic opportunities were propagandised and heated up enough to declare their desire for independent breakaway states. This, no sovereign nation could tolerate and like the Russians in Chechnya or the Israelis in Jerusalem, the governments had no choice but to draw the line to save the souls of their nations.

So, armed and organized challenges to the government had to be funded. And like the PLO, Afghanis, half a dozen Latin American rebel groups before them etc. etc. the European drug trade was opened to the Kosovo Liberation Army. Today NATO is fighting on behalf of one of the largest heroin suppliers of Western Europe. But that's par for the NWO course.

Once the fighting began, in came the NWO "peacemakers:" Vance, Christopher, Holbrooke, Albright, every one of them a loyal CFR member, to impose conditions the Serbs could never possibly accept. Milosevic's unforgivable crime was standing up to the NWO and refusing to allow its army to roam his land at will.

And for this he is being punished. And Netanyahu has got the message. If he doesn't play ball, he will be demonized just like Milosevic, the world will be primed to despise him and in will come the NWO's air force. If he doesn't give the PLO its state on historical Jewish territory this year here is what will happen:

The PLO will unilaterally declare a state and Israel will annex the remaining West Bank territories in her possession. A wave of Arab terrorism will force Israel to retaliate and a cycle of violence will begin which will duplicate that of Yugoslavia. The "peacemakers" of the NWO will arrive and insist that Israel accept every clause of the Oslo Accords, give up its history and heritage to the PLO and divide Jerusalem. When Israel refuses to relent, it will be painted quickly as a mortal danger to the peace of the planet. In order to "save" Israel from itself, the NWO forces will attack and impose its solutions on her.

And to most of the world, the events that lead to this war will seem totally logical. Like, in Kosovo today, the media will stage-manage every step of the war and a world under televised anaesthesia will believe the broadcasters, generals and military experts. And this world will simply sleep through Israel's destruction. When it awakes it will change channels.

U.S MILITARY UFO COVER-UP FOILED IN AUSTRALIA

It happened in 1992 but is only told now

Reported by Warren Aston UFO Researcher

Researcher Warren Aston has just released details of an amazing UFO cover-up attempted by U.S military personnel based at the Top-Secret underground Pine Gap base in Australia. Details have now been released of how two Australian policeman unwittingly foiled an attempt by two U.S military personal to cover-up UFO activity over the nearby town of Alice Springs.

Many Alice Springs residents reported fast-moving lights flying over the central Australian town on the evening of 26th November, 1996. Police were numbered among those making reports of the strangely manoeuvring lights.

At least one video of the object was captured by a policeman and is now undergoing analysis in the U.S. A little over an hour later that same evening, two policeman on patrol (who have requested anonymity) witnessed a number of hot-air balloons slowly bobbing over the town. At the same time a call came in asking them to investigate suspicious activity by a car on an isolated back road in the dessert east of the town. Suspecting a link with the balloons over the town, the two officers sped off and they quickly apprehended a station wagon full of plastic hot air balloons in various stages of construction, including one on the side of the road ready to be sent aloft.

The two men in the vehicle had North American accents and at first refused to answer questions, but when threatened with arrest they reluctantly produced ID cards identifying them as personnel from the massive super-secret Pine Gap facility located nearby. Under agreement between the Australian and US Governments, personnel at this American-run base are virtually immune from legal action. Eventually the men, claiming to be merely a geologist and an engineer, were allowed to drive off into the darkness, leaving behind many unanswered questions.

Why would staff from a secret American base in Australia be involved in setting off hot air balloons outside a nearby town? Clearly, they were attempting to confuse the UFO sightings made earlier that evening. Were they then going to claim that these reports were only hot air balloons?

And if so, as seems likely, WHY??. Pine Gap base, hidden in the remote and geologically stable Australian out back, has long been linked to covert U.S military/Intelligence activity concerning recovered Alien craft and secretly developed military programs.

Among other things, in recent years Pine Gap has been linked with white disks seen flying from hidden access points on the base and with the beams of "energy" fired into space causing a fast moving UFO to reverse it's course in full view of the shuttle Discovery's cameras in 1991. This latest development will do nothing to quell the growing suspicion that PINE GAP is crucial, perhaps even central, to these covert efforts.

Rockefeller Funds Crop Circle Research

For once I can report positive things in the crop circle world. As I write this, I've just received news that Laurence Rockefeller, the 89 year old millionaire business man and philanthropist, is helping to fund crop circle research this year. Colin Andrews, the internationally respected crop circle researcher, made the announcement, which was met with positive comment from the World's media who seem to now acknowledge that after nearly 20 years of research there is still an ongoing mystery to the subject.

Perhaps this will help to enlist the support of academic scientists, whom until now have feared associating themselves with the subject in case of ridicule or withdrawal of funding and/or sponsorship.

Rockefeller is interested in all things spiritual and philosophical and I hope that his help will help find answers.

COUNTRY FILE - FURTHER COMMENTS

BY MATTHEW WILLIAMS

In the case of the Country File show, it appears that the makers had wanted a particular slant on what crop circles were about and had done a "pre-treatment" which

My name is Matthew Williams and I am referred to in Paul Vigay's recent report on the Countryfile program dealing with Crop Circles.

I just wanted to state that whilst Paul's article is the most accurate on this particular program I have seen there are subtle problems which I need to explain which will help the reader understand why parts of the program appeared the way they did.

The TV Game

Firstly before I go on to the details of the program let me say that over the years I have been involved with TV programs and documentaries on both sides of the camera. I know how the TV game works and the ways that program makers often make assumptions and cut corners in order to give the "feel" they want to a piece of work. I have often found program makers encouraging people to say things "their way" and also to stage situations which are obviously unnatural to the witness. This ends up making a slick piece of TV but does not represent the true facts of a situation. In essence - coming from somebody who knows - don't trust anything you read in newspapers or see on TV. It is often lies or gross exaggeration!!!

gave an outline of who they would like to see in the show and the types of things they expected people to say.

Lies, Damned Lies and TV Editing

Having picked the people and contacted them, filming commenced and suitable comments and statements were picked and earmarked for the edit. These comments may not be a true reflection of the whole conversations which really took place because after all the segment was only about 20 minutes or so. This defines the word "Edit". Participants rarely have any choice over how they are edited into a program and often sign "release forms" to allow their interviews to be used in programs. These release forms are a moral disclaimer which basically means that the program makers are allowed to make a person say or appear to do anything they want in their editing and re-jigging... and that you have no right to redress. In fact, these release forms hold no real legal basis because someone can still complain that the material was defamatory or lied in some way and seek redress through courts or TV ombudsman, but this rarely ever happens.

The Important Bit

Now I will give you a small example of how the feature misrepresented the events of the night in relation to us finding "The Circlemakers" at work in the field below Milk Hill, opposite Stanton St Bernard.

Nightwatching...

After Doug & Dave and TV crew had driven off from the interview conducted on East Kennett Hill, at high speed - helped by a police road block, to prevent researchers from following them... myself and researcher Paul Damon went on a scan of the countryside to see if we could spot the group. Armed with nightvision binoculars and my 1.5 million candlewatt search-lamp we scoured the area surrounding Silbury Hill and Avebury and then moved on to Alton Barnes. We knew that other researchers were out looking for the TV cars in other areas. We were just the lucky ones who found them... and it wasn't how the TV show represented it happened! Also it was the very first time this team of circlemakers (the most prolific team ever to hit the fields of Wiltshire!) were caught at night, making circles.

High Speed Car Chases!

We were driving near Stanton St Bernard and saw a car full of people known to me as circlemakers - but as it turns out this group were not the team who were helping the BBC. I stopped and asked the group why they were there and were they helping the BBC with making a circle. They stated that they knew nothing about the BBC being in the area and were just parked up having a chat. I found this suspicious and was just about to question them further when the BBC

TV car turned up and drove down the small lane where we were and drove past us. When they realised that we as researchers had spotted them they sped off, performed a series of high speed turns and tore off at 70 mph plus, along the country lanes. We tried to follow, but the BBC had a faster car and got away.

We returned to the circlemakers and asked them why the BBC would just happen to come near them when they were parked up. They said they did not know and eventually when we stopped talking, they drove off, and we followed their car out of the area. Thinking that the BBC coming to the Stanton St Bernard parking was too much to chance and that they may be meeting the circlemakers later on, we returned to the same spot and waited. Lo-and-behold the BBC drove past again. So were they trying to meet these circlemakers? Apparently not....

We gave pursuit to the BBC and due to their Volvo 440 Turbo versus our Nissan Micra 1 litre, we didn't get very far against their now 80+ mph chase speed! So we had lost them a second time. Still, we knew that car parking spot was significant in some way, so decided to scan all the fields in that area. About 20 minutes later at nearly the same spot where the cars were parked we observed a white Volvo 400 parked in a field below Milk Hill. We observed this via our lamp and not the nightvision camera, though the nightvision camera was used to spot the occupants of the Volvo near the car about to head into the field.

We drove up the path towards the Volvo and observed other cars parked nearby and were greeted by a rather angry circlemaker known as John Lundberg....

Caught in the Act

John thought that our sole purpose in following the BBC and approaching them now was to stop them making their circle, with the BBC. However once I had explained to John that we were not out to spoil their circlemaking activities - simply to show that they could be caught in the act, and that I was happy to watch the circle being made things calmed down and we were allowed to observe the making of the formation. The BBC had paid the farmer for the use of the field and because everything was above board we had no right to interfere.

To note, this team of circlemakers were a different set of people to the group we had seen in the other car and when we explained that we had seen another group nearby, this group denied having known they were in the area. To be honest I see no reason for the team we were with or the BBC to lie about this as the game was up, so to speak, there was no point in any more secrecy.

During the night the BBC regularly stopped the circlemaker team and Doug to conduct interviews. The BBC were using nightvision equipment and this allowed all activities to take place in complete darkness so was for the very first time a fair way to see that the circlemakers claims of being able to create complex and large circles in the dark are indeed true.

Delayed Start

However the problems started in that because of the chasing around in cars had delayed the start of the circlemaking. The constant interruptions from the BBC and indeed us to talk to the circlemakers as they worked meant that progress on the circles was running behind. The circlemaker team did finish their circle before sun-up but it appeared that Doug and Rupert Segar had been very slow and needed help finishing off.

This goes against Paul Vigay's point that Doug seemed hardly capable of making a large circle... indeed he could have if not interrupted. Doug was fitter than Rupert Segar, the interviewer, who was much younger!

The interviews with Rupert, which came later on were slightly staged in order to give a different impression about the way the circles were being created - one of linear creation without interruption from the BBC.... however this was not the case - there were indeed lots of interruptions. In fairness to the circlemakers, had they started earlier in the night and worked without distractions they could have created a circle probably in excess of three times the size of the pattern they finally created.

The Finished Work

By morning light we could see the finished work and we were thoroughly impressed by their formations and those of Doug Bower... though we know that the TV piece has a flavour which does not ring quite true to the events as they happened. But that is TV... it is not for the insiders... it is for millions of viewers who are not so well informed... and what viewers want to see and more importantly what program producers want them to see is vastly different.

Thanks to Paul Vigay for putting forward his piece. I thought I would expand on it to help people understand that TV is not the best medium for learning the truth and Paul's idea that you have to immerse yourself in the flesh to learn about this and any other subject is a valid one.

Yours sincerely,

Matthew Williams
